

Matthew Voell J.D.

Matthew Voell joins Providence Health Care after completing a law degree at the University of British Columbia. Prior to attending UBC Matt studied analytic philosophy at the University of Wisconsin. In addition to his work with Providence Matt is a research assistant with the Intellectual Property and Policy Research Group. The IPPRG, centered at UBC's W. Maurice Young Centre for Applied Ethics, explores the viability of alternative intellectual property regimes for use upon the products of genomic research. Matt brings to Providence a Catholic education and background. He grew up in a strong Catholic home and spent four years studying at St. Lawrence Seminary, a Capuchin Franciscan minor seminary in Mt. Calvary, Wisconsin. When not working Matt enjoys playing basketball, tennis and squash and reading and writing. His specific research interests include the regulation of biotechnology, public health law and ethics, human enhancement and the principles of dignity and autonomy.
